Industry

Well, it has been an amazing year. We all had such high hopes. 2009 was a year beginning with a new president that touted the value and purpose of small business. The marketing campaign with small business banners and Cinderella stories excited all of us to borrow against our homes and dedicate every spare dime to applying for Department of Energy grants, loans, and loan guarantees. The White House very cleverly vacuumed millions out of the pockets of small business owners nationwide and stuffed the stockings of the world's largest corporations. More than half a billion dollars in grants awarded in 2009 have still not been delivered to companies struggling to meet customer demand for energy storage and generation devices. The only answer anyone can get from the Department of Energy officials is, "Small business has no business doing this on their own. If they want to supply GE or GM, then we will give them a grant. But if they want to do it access the market directly, forget about it."

And the Department of Transportation is even worse. Speaking for nearly 30 minutes about how the federal tax on gasoline was going to double in order to raise more than a trillion dollars to refurbish 230,000 miles of rail in the U.S. He then described a plan to get Americans out of their cars and onto trains to go everywhere. He painted a picture of millions of jobs being created working for the government projects to get this done. When I asked him face to face about what the DOT was going to do to support small business bringing electric vehicles to the American highway, the Secretary told me personally in front of hundreds of witnesses, "Just go buy a GM. Buy a Volt. They made the investment." The room turned so chilly that he smiled and said, "Thank you for coming to Washington." He left the room. Everyone knew it was actually the American taxpayer that had made the investment.

There is good news though. We survived. Private investors, hiding from the zombieland of entrepreneurs looking for cash to start any one of a thousand different businesses, have begun to come forward to speak to Vision Motor Cars. The Company now has more than 155 thousand orders for its $25,000 pickup cab and chassis, nearly eight times the orders Nissan is advertising they have for their high-priced Leaf. Without an on-board charger and requiring a $4,500 home installation, plus an increase in homeowner insurance rates, their vehicle model is doomed to failure.

Buyers in Holland, Kenya, Israel, South America, Canada, and the United States are driving Vision Motor Cars to the bank, so to speak. 2011 will be the year of the electric vehicle. Creating hundreds of new jobs and supporting three major new industries breaking into the automotive industry, VMC has the potential to launch a multi-billion dollar Company and returning $350 million a day in cash to American consumers who would rather buy something other than gasoline.

Weather and Climate Change

For the past year, I been posting articles as they come up about weather that makes the news. One thing is for sure. There is no doubt that weather is becoming more extreme. 2010 goes down and remarkably more warm than any year since records have been kept. But the extremes in weather highs and lows draw the most attention from me. It is colder in the Southern hemisphere and Northern hemisphere. It is also warmer in both hemispheres. Glaciers are growing at the rate of several meters each year, and yet water shortages are becoming more and more prevalent. From LA to Sydney, there is something going on. The Sun isn't behaving according to the textbooks written or even the new predictions being made, despite the new SDO inputs. We can see more and measure more about the Sun than ever before, and yet we understand even less about this solar cycle number 24, than we do the presence of life on other worlds. Scientists are guessing. Governments are fretting. The people are wondering if it's safe to go to the beach and NASA is wondering which moment every satellite we have will be baked into junk metal by an overdue sun-temper tantrum.

My assertions that Cosmic bodies are influenced by the intention of humans and other sentient beings in this neighborhood is becoming more and more valid. I guess you see the challenge already. How do we settle down as a race and get the energy of the solar system working for us in a safe and organized fashion? I can only say that the toolbox for doing so has been discovered in my latest book Remembering the Future: The Physics for the Soul and Time Travel. What people choose to do with that toolbox is up to them.

I hope people take down the pinups of bog homes on the golf course, shiny sports cars, and other such solid and wasteful intentions. I hope they realize that the physical things of this dimension are all available as a result of great dreams and sound manifestations with skilled use of the techniques in the book. That is to say, Being and Doing will result in Having soon enough, but that having stuff is not really the objective. Rather, it is the side-effect of the process. If you get it right, you will realize that the toys and possessions of this dimension are woefully unsatisfying compared to joy and peace of being on purpose with your life. When you're doing what you always wanted to do, the stuff you always wanted to have will fall into your lap, or you won't care if they don't.

This is integral to the weather and condition of the Earth. Oh yes it is. With a race in turmoil, driven by greed and frustrated with scarcity, the Earth is in turmoil unable to resonate with any sort of balance. The weather is a symptom of the disability. The ultimate allergic reaction has cataclysmically cleaved humans from the surface before. We have been here before. There has not been a single week we have not been at war in many millennia. We have killed for land, water, and a view of the wilderness out our personal living room window. Or worse. We have paid others to kill for our greed.

Whether the dead victims placed themselves in death's path on purpose or not, and whether the perpetrator wielded his deed as part of a pre-mortal agreement can be argued as well. The choice is ours, and ours alone. The energy born of these choices to think and act resonates with all matter and energy in the neighborhood. The Earth herself is showing the sympathetic vibrations of the thoughts and actions of human beings.

This makes us directly responsible for the change in climate. That is to say, it is much more than our carbon footprint. It is our thoughtprint that influences the weather. Our thoughtprint is an individual value in a population of nearly 7 billion values alive on this Earth right now. How do we change the average of that population? It is difficult, but it can be done through awakening. How do we manage the range of values, the standard deviation of those values? That is something to think about, but it is even more easily achievable.

The difference between the extremes is already evident; too hot and too cold. But the standard deviation of the single value from the average value is beginning to reach epic proportions. This means, mathematically, that there is a shift occurring right in front of us. The awakened are talking to those who are asleep. And they are waking up. And as they do, the energy of the population changes. Well, the change is clear. Where we will end up in a stable state, is not very clear at all.

It is still possible that the war-mongers will win. It is also very possible that the peace-lovers will win. Different tactics and different weapons. One wins through killing people and breaking things. The other wins through the joy people choose instead of the screams of agony and scarcity.

Choose ascension and the Christ energy inside of you. Becoming like it, you will more easily recognize it. No, I am not getting evangelical on you. This is an energy that is and can connect to the Christ grid that is locked to the planet Earth just like the MerKaBa is locked to your physical body. When you connect in this way, the planet resonates with the energy. One or two people have a small effect. One or two billion have an amazing effect. The rendezvous with this galactic neighborhood is no coincidence. We have this one chance. And you chose to be here....along with about 7 billion of your friends. Come one. We can do this.

Features and Specials

Okay. There is a LIKE button at X-Squared Radio. I want you to go there and click it. Then write your friends and have them click it. I am looking for 20 thousand "Likes" before Christmas. It's important to me. It's free to you and your friends. www.xsquaredradio.com

Nick Redfern with his newest book The NASA Conspiracies is coming on this Sunday. It's going to be awesome.

Len Kasten with his newest work The Secret History of Extraterrestrials is coming on the 19th.

We may have a live broadcast on the 26th. We may not. It's a mystery for now.

You can still get Remembering the Future: The Physics of the Soul and Time Travel in autographed form by Christmas if you order now. Go to <http://rememberingthefuturebook.com> and order today.

I am putting together a Flower of Life Mediation Training Seminar in Charlotte, NC. Very soon. If you're interested, Please write me at bagnew@x2-radio.com and let me know. The price will be very inexpensive. There will be a buddy-pass where you can bring a friend with you for half price. There's a 55-page workbook free and some other good stuff that is not free but very affordable. It's a meditation for busy people, and it works.

Peace and joy to you and for everyone you think about. Think about everyone for just a moment.
